

HOW ASIAN MEDICINE DIFFERS FROM WESTERN MEDICINE: AND WHY TO USE THEM AS COMPLEMENTS

~ Jane Grissmer, M.Ac.

Amazing what we have all witnessed in the political arena this past summer with President Biden dropping out of the race? The power of how one change can alter our perceptions and shift the reality we are living. We might say that was an amazing acupuncture treatment! Why? Because one well placed needle has the same power to alter our perceptions or reactions to any phenomena in our lives. Our negatives may suddenly take on a brighter tone or we experience a renewed capacity in living them. That is the transformational nature of acupuncture.

If you have had the same problem for a long time, acupuncture will give you a new view.

To appreciate this is to understand that acupuncture works with an entirely different body. How, you might say, is it different? My favorite class for acupuncture students was to show them the amazingly different views of the human body as found in early Greek and Chinese medicine. The picture below speaks more than a thousand words. So here side by side is the divergence in thought that took place thousands of years ago. The Greek view is the muscular body; the Chinese view the Meridians of Qi.

It is fascinating for me to witness aspects of our human bodies that western medicine has never even thought of. For instance, the little finger is connected to our heart health. On a patient with a crook in that finger I was able to discern a heart irregularity not picked up by his MD. Or in another patient the repeated twist of an ankle joint that revealed itself in indecision....where to step forward. I spend time helping each patient view how their symptoms make sense from a different lens; and by being treated from a different lens, can have a different outcome.

This is why acupuncture should always be a complement to your health care. It offers unique insight and often great relief when one's experience is understood through another perspective. It is amazing how much help western doctors and their patients can find through interconnections they have never considered.
